The Tree in The Winter
by Wag

My father seems so strong.
Not big or huge -
Just stable and strong.

He seems to be anchored.
His roots run deep -
Drawing no attention to himself.

He is like a tree in the winter.
Often overlooked.
Standing strong.
Quietly anchored.
Always silent.

Yet deeply communicating,
There is no uncertainty.
Really no reason to notice.
Unless you are observant of reality.

If you are looking for color and drama
The tree in the winter is not even seen.
How unfortunate.
It contributes so much to go unnoticed,
I'm glad I took the time to see the tree -
so much like my father.

“ To My Father - Dad, I have always felt so very fortunate to have you as my dad! Words alone can and will never express how thankful I am to have had a dad like you. You were always there for me good, bad or indifferent, encouraging and supporting me though all the years. Back when I was working construction, as a father, you struggled with me doing that type of work. You did not like or think that your daughter should be working that hard. But then you told me that you would secretly park down the street from whichever job I was on and watch me work and being proud of your daughter for working as hard as I did. You telling me how proud you were of me with the different jobs I had, those are memories that I cherish and hold dear to me. I can not express how much that meant to me when you told me of those times. When I am feeling down and kicking myself, I think of those times, and remember, I did make my dad proud! And I will always be proud of the man that was my father and think, "I bet everyone wished they had a father like mine!" Recently you told me that the thing you liked the most was that I was always happy. You made me happy dad, you were my strength and my positive support, I will miss that more than you know! I will keep those thoughts with me and try to stay that happy person you knew and the person you were proud of dad! I will miss you dearly dad, I love you dad!
