

Antonio "Tony" Lee Zamora

December 9, 1982 - February 9, 2021

When tomorrow starts without me, don't think we're far apart, for every time you think of me I'm right there in your heart.

“ Hey buddy. Today was another day when you came to mind. I missed your funeral, and I still feel terrible about that. (You know how work can get). Anyway, thanks for the time you were checking on Lucky and she bit you because the neighbor had aggravated her (we think). I know I thanked you then, but I had to make it official here, to show that you are not forgotten, dude. I wish we could've spoken more before you left. Miss you, bro!

“ I haven't seen Tony since high school, but was shocked and saddened to hear about his sudden departure. Tony, may you be with the Lord in his kingdom. You will be missed my friend.

“ In our junior year, Antonio and I had physics together with Mr. Fox. We were given this assignment, I don't remember what it was. Anyway, I went to Antonio's house and we were experimenting with a Ouija board for our class assignment. I think we were debunking it. Anyway as we're doing our experiment, I start seeing a curtain move and a paper flutter and other "paranormal" things happening. I didn't believe it was due to the Ouija board, but it got my attention and I was freaked out. So come Monday, it's time for our presentation. Before we start, Antonio proceeds to tell the class how he set up things to appear as though the curtains were moving and the paper was fluttering to mess with me. My mouth literally dropped open and Mr. Fox was cracking up at the look on my face. I wanted to dropkick him on sight and he and the class were cracking up. Antonio was that kind of guy, hilarious and always laughing. Oh and he had such a thing for Britney Spears. I'll miss you.
