“ I recall reading an obituary many years back of a young girl who passed away from a rare cancer. The girl wrote her own obituary and said that the best medicine she ever received was her friends and family. RIP Beth.

“ Today I have completed a nine-day novena prayer before the Blessed Sacrament with the required nine-day fast and confession for the release of BAF from additional suffering caused by cremation. Cremation has been around and allowed by Catholic Church since 1960s, but it only recently came to light that it carries a price, as revealed by the Church's most recent addition to the retinue of saints, a brilliant teenager Carlo Acutis from Milan, Italy (+10/12/2006). Finally, I have lit a seven-day votive candle for Beth today in a small cathedral church in front of a side altar for HVM calling for the intercession by the Blessed Virgin and saints.

“ Our paths have crossed at the U of Maryland where she was a student a quarter century ago. Most brainy and cheerful person. Unfortunately, I never got to know her well. Like everyone else I am devastated by her untimely death. Luckily for her, this is a Jubilee Holy Year of Hope which means that because of the 200-mile round trip pilgrimage that I made to a designated Catholic cathedral church yesterday, she is now released from purgatorial suffering. We should continue praying and the family should be ordering Masses including 30 Gregorian Masses for her release from Purgatory in some quiet monastery. She continues to suffer because of cremation.
